This panel discussion explores issues of language, expression and identity among the Mixteco community in New York City. Often invisible within the multitudes of Mexican immigrants, many from the same region of Mexico, these estimated 25,000 indigenous migrants bring a rich and complex history of language diversity as part of their transborder experience. This New York community faces special challenges in the areas of education and social services. A panel of experts and community members will look at the unique situation of this special migrant community.

This program is presented in collaboration with Mano a Mano: Mexican Cultures Without Borders.
